Welcome to OUR LADY of GRACE!

Welcome to all who are joining us for the celebration of the Eucharist. There are many ways and parish organizations to participate in our life in Christ. See the directory on page 7.

We invite all who attend OLG to become registered members of our parish. Registration forms are available on the table in the main entry of the church or the parish office. Registration allows us to communicate and effectively provide for your needs. It is necessary for baptism, marriage, and godparent or sponsor certification.

Mindfulness of Others—Please silence all devices and refrain from using them during the liturgy. The parish has a Children's Chapel located in the northwest corner of the church. Parents with restless children are welcome to make use of this chapel at any time during Mass should it be necessary. We ask that this chapel, like the church itself, remain free of food and drink.

Allergies—The first morning Mass of the Sunday or holyday will always be incense-free.

Invitation to the R.C.I.A.

Our Lady of Grace Parish welcomes all who seek to enrich their faith life and explore the possibility of becoming a Catholic Christian. Our community shares and celebrates this journey with them through a process called "The Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults." If you are curious about what Catholics believe and may be interested in learning more about joining the Catholic faith—or perhaps you are an adult Catholic looking to be fully initiated—you are cordially invited to enter the R.C.I.A. process and experience a new and enriched meaning to your life through renewed faith and love. For more info, please contact Deacon John Sawaya at (858) 869-5079 or jsawaya@olg-church.org.

GUEST COLUMNIST

ALICE CAMILLE

The Trustworthy Steward

As any teacher or public speaker knows, the best way to deliver a message is to tell a story that drives the point memorably home. Rest assured that people will lose the handouts, shelve their notes, and forget the PowerPoint display in short order. But an evocative story has staying power. The longer it is savored, the more its meaning penetrates our understanding.

So it is not surprising to note how frequently biblical writers resort to storytelling as a mode of exhortation. Sure, there are long lists of laws, rules, and moral instructions in the Bible, too, but how familiar is the average churchgoer with Leviticus and Sirach? The best known and most well-loved part of the scripture is the Book of Genesis. That's where the stories are. That's where the action is and where listening becomes learning.

In today's readings, we see that the writer of Wisdom appeals to the great story of the Exodus to illustrate God's special providence for the just, while the writer of Hebrews retells the exploits of Abraham to affirm the necessity for a vital faith. In the gospel, Jesus underscores a teaching on stewardship with contrasting parables about responsible and reprehensible servants. Though all three of these teachers were no doubt held in great esteem by their audiences, chances are their lessons might have slipped beyond their listeners—and any future disciples—if they had relied on a thesis statement alone.

The holy children of the good

Times were hard in Egypt as Jacob's children languished in slavery. If you read the account of their trials in the Book of Exodus, you know that the people of God were not fervently awaiting their deliverance at the hand of the Almighty. They definitely wanted to be released from their chains, but they lacked a communal experience of the divine to rally around in sacred memory. On the night of Passover, however, all of that changed. From that night on, they were a people with a story to tell, a ritual to repeat, and an experience to count on. The nation that would emerge from Passover night would become the stewards of holy memory, recalling the story for each new generation: "Why is this night different from every other night?"

Christians, too, are stewards of the stories of salvation, not just the climactic good news of the gospel but of all the experiences of God's people leading up to it as well. This is why we recount both storylines—Old and New Testaments, Hebrew and Christian scripture—in our liturgies. This practice dates from the first century of the church, when Judaism and Christianity were by no means distinct identities. The Letter to the Hebrews demonstrates what this dual religious consciousness was like. The writer intertwines the personalities of the ancient story and the contemporary witness of Christians with a seamless sensibility. Abraham and Sarah—not to mention Moses, David, the judges, and the prophets—all acted in faith and were rewarded for their trust in God. Yet none received the fullness of the promises they believed in, the writer notes. How favored the Christian community is in its faith, to be the immediate beneficiaries of what they hold true! Christ assumes, perfects, and fulfills the meaning of salvation history as a whole. The ancient stories, far from being rejected or replaced, are illuminated with a new light.

The parables of Jesus

Jesus is rarely depicted as retelling the ancient stories. He knew other teachers were handling that end of the business. Instead, he created stories to open new windows on human understanding. His parables were memorable because they were fresh and contemporary. The folks in the crowds were familiar with servants like the ones Jesus described: the fellow who is vigilant for his master's arrival and has the household organized to receive him, as well as the abusive servant who raids the kitchen and the liquor cabinet, beats the men beneath his station, and takes liberties with the women. These and other characters that Jesus described—a farmer sowing seed or a woman baking bread—were imbued with meaning because of the tag ending that Jesus applied to these common scenes.

So Jesus effectively communicates two messages at once through the vehicle of story: one, the stated teaching (e.g., "You must also be prepared, for at an hour you do not expect, the Son of Man will come”), and two, the implicit message that the truths of the reign of God are “hidden out in the open” of ordinary experience.

The ancient stories that other teachers tell and retell remind us that God has worked in human history in a great cooperation for the purpose of our salvation. These are proof texts we can use as ballast against the tossing and turning of contemporary times, where God’s intervention may seem noticeably absent. But the stories Jesus tells are not reminders so much as revealers. They lift the veil on our present experiences to show us that God’s grace is active in every hour and is available with those who have eyes to see.

Telling a modern tale of grace

What is the trick to opening up the parables for today’s audience? Some feel the stories of agrarian culture or ancient social codes are no longer accessible to civilized urbanites. I personally doubt we are that civilized. But to overcome the perceived lost worldview, we often deliver meticulous homilies about the precise nature of sheep or fun facts to remember about first-century Judean households. This approach can be instructive, but it relies on the notion of analogy, which parables are not. It also begs the deeper issue: Is the homily to instruct or inspire? It would be closer to the tactic of Jesus to tell steward stories of our own, about responsible and neglectful parents, or—at our own expense—nurturing or lazy pastors, and how the reign of God comes to light through them. The stories have not changed much. Only the roles get moved around to protect the perpetrators.
